Course Aim

The objective of this course is to give the participants knowledge of the correct procedures in regard to the cargo handling operation of a bulk carrier. Many uninformed in the industry think that you only need to open up a ship's hatches and pour the cargo on board or pull the cargo out in any order. Unfortunately the operation is a lot more complicated than it first seems.

The aims of the ship's officers, the stevedores and the cargo owners are the same, to get the cargo in or out of the ship in the quickest possible time, but there the similarity ends. How this can be achieved from each party's perspective is very different. The ship needs to know some of the difficulties that may be occurring ashore and the personnel ashore must be fully conversant with the problems that can happen on board. Good communication between all parties is the key to any maritime operation and none more important than in handling a bulk carrier in port because of the very limited time these vessels now spend alongside the wharf. This course is therefore focused on informing those ashore of how a bulk carrier operates and of the dangers that exist if there is a breakdown in the communications with the ship during the cargo operation.
